Sustainable SAFARIS

LONELY PLANET'S GUIDE TO THOSE ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME ADVENTURES

We are so keen to encounter animals that we travel great distances to wander where wild things roam. It's a little mad, but it also might be totally natural. According to modern-day Darwin, EO Wilson, our attraction to the natural world and living things is innate. And it comes with a bonus: being in the wild forces you out of your head and into the present – fertile grounds for a reset. So, book that safari trip, and pick an outfitter with strong, ethical practices and a commitment to conservation.

Sabi Sabi, South Africa

Experience the thrill of seeing animals in the wild.

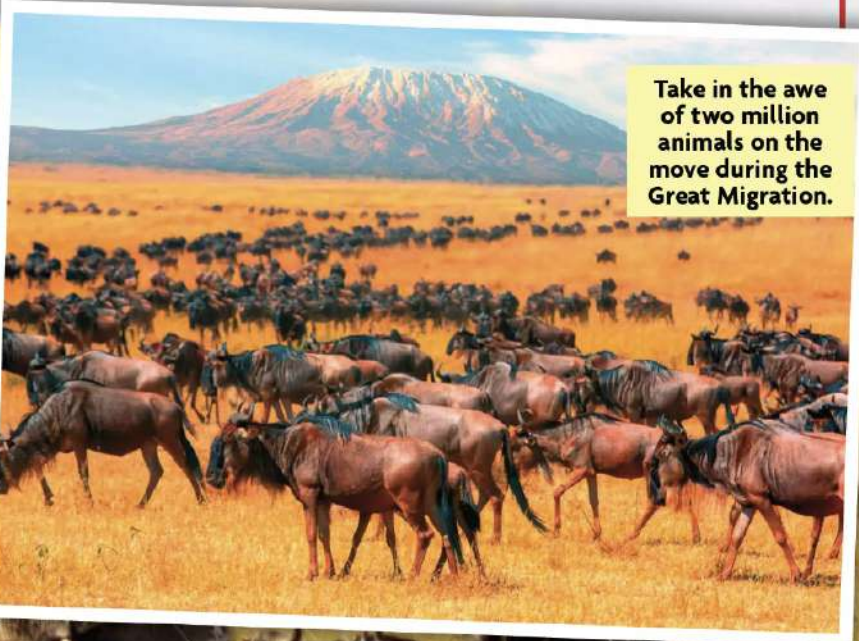

With no fence separating this private game reserve from the Kruger National Park, big game – and yes, that includes the Big Five – are free to pass through. Wild is woven into every moment at Sabi Sabi: sip your morning coffee while a herd of elephants drink from a watering hole nearby. Watch lions catch an afternoon nap. Spot hyenas slinking through the darkness. Soak in a tub with views of the Bushveld, and dine on local eats under the stars.

ESSENTIAL INFORMATION: Sabi Sabi is a one-hour flight from OR Tambo International Airport in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Cottar's Safaris, Kenya

Tucked between Kenya's Maasai Mara and Tanzania's Serengeti National Park, the sole safari camp in Olderkesi Conservancy offers tourists the chance to contribute to conservation and witness the Great Migration – without the crowds. Bushwalks and game drives will immerse you in the rich biodiversity and 'Impact Experiences' will connect you with people – take a medicinal walk with a hunter-gatherer or join a ranger for a day – at the only Maasai Mara camp to employ an all-female ranger unit. ESSENTIAL INFORMATION: Cottar's Private Airstrip is a 40 minute flight from Wilson Airport in Nairobi, Kenya.

Take in the awe of two million animals on the move during the Great Migration.

Pugdundee Safaris, Central India

Tread lightly throughout the rugged terrain of Satpura Tiger Reserve on a trip with Central India's pioneers of walking safaris. But stay alert; although this is a lesser-known park and the hike through the jungle can be meditative, you're walking in the wild and Satpura is home to tigers, leopards, wild boar, crocodiles, bison, sloth bears and more. If you prefer solid walls rather than swag camps at night, you can opt instead for one of Pugdundee's eco-lodge-based safaris. ESSENTIAL INFORMATION: The closest airport to Pugdundee Safaris and eco-lodges is in Bhopal, Madhya Pradesh.

Churchill Wild Manitoba, Canada

The side effects of embarking on the only walking safari in polar bear territory might include a sense of both awe and 'awww' – these captivating creatures are simultaneously fierce and fetching! No two experiences are exactly alike in this remote wilderness on the edge of the Arctic, each day dictated by weather and wildlife movement, and each night an opportunity to bathe in the enchanting, electric blaze of the aurora borealis, which appears here 300 days per year. ESSENTIAL INFORMATION: Churchill Wild's lodges and safari experiences are easily accessible by bush plane from Churchill, Manitoba.
